

Angie Miller-Scroggins

Angie grew up in Amish country in Goshen, Indiana. She lives in an inner-city neighborhood in Columbus, Ohio, with her husband John and daughter Anaya. Before she was in elementary school, she knew she wanted to be a teacher. She studied to become one at Bethel College, graduating Summa Cum Laude with a B.A. Elementary Education. She specialized in TESOL (Teachers of English to Speakers of Other Languages) and has enjoyed teaching English to immigrant and refugee children from around the world, primarily in inner-city school settings in Indiana and Ohio. Angie lived for 15 months in Ecuador and Costa Rica as a missions intern with Rosedale Mennonite Missions, picking up conversational Spanish in the process. She earned her Master's degree in Cross-Cultural Studies from Fuller Theological Seminary, doing her practicum in Cameroon, Africa. She survived a grueling L.A. marathon in 104° heat, has traveled on five continents, and is very close to checking off visiting all 50 U.S. States. She enjoys puzzles, experiencing other cultures, cross-cultural friendships, traveling, hiking and scrap-booking. She's a scrabble queen, and takes it graciously when, on the rare occasion, her husband wins. She loves children's literature and would one day like to write a children's book. Angie and her husband and daughter attend Columbus Network of Micro-Churches, a house-church network.
